Carbon footprinting

Carbon footprinting for the packaging, paper and print supply chains

There is overwhelming scientific consensus on the influence of human activities on climate change, coupled with high levels of media coverage and public awareness. Together these have brought the subject of carbon footprints to the fore.

A carbon footprint is a measure of the emissions of carbon dioxide (and other potential greenhouse gases) arising as a result of a specified activity or product. Quantifying the carbon footprint of an activity or product allows the sources of the impacts to be understood, investigated and managed.

Strategies for managing impact could include changing the nature of some activities so as to reduce the total carbon emissions and/or off-setting emissions through an off-set scheme.

STFI-Packforsk Edge can work with you on carbon footprint issues at a product, company or supply chain / sector level.

Quantifying a business's carbon footprint allows decision makers to understand the implications of specific activities and hence manage the carbon footprint accordingly. It anticipates potential exposure and risk.
